

A significant care gap is emerging. The greater demand for home care services, and a labor force that's experiencing little growth is resulting in a short supply of caregivers to provide home care services.

Let's take a closer look at the numbers.

OCCUPATIONS WITH THE MOST JOB GROWTH 2014-2024

NEW HOME CARE JOBS BY OCCUPATION TITLE 2014-2024

HOME CARE PROJECTIONS

From 2014 to 2024, home care is projected to add 633,100 new jobs. That's more jobs than any other single occupation. On top of that, the population of adults over age 65 is expected to nearly double, growing from 47.8 million to 88 million by 2025.<sup>1</sup>

HOURLY WAGES ARE ON THE DECLINE<sup>2</sup>

HOME CARE WAGES ARE INSUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT A HOUSEHOLD OF TWO OR MORE<sup>2</sup>

LENGTH OF CARE

Higher-hour caregivers are twice as likely to have been in their caregiving role for 10 years or more.<sup>1</sup>

ALTERNATIVE WAYS TO CUT COSTS & MEET DEMAND

Many home health providers have begun to feel immense pressure to reduce operating costs, and as such, have turned to alternative strategies and independent caregiver management software to reduce operating costs and match service capacity with patient needs by:

Removing the burdens of back-office administration and accelerate onboarding and processing related to pay with real-time verifications.

Capturing all contractual and compliance documentation in an automated, web-based environment with the ability to create custom enrollment workflows that can accommodate a variety of complex compliance requirements.

Tracking back-and-forth communication in an audit trail, and captures the final negotiated rate safeguarding both parties from any 'hearsay' issues related to the agreement.
